A day spent on Ellis Island studying types and looking over statistics can-not help but impress one with the idea that the United States is bound to ouffer from the deterioration of the class of newcomers. Fifteen hundred years agd the Roman Empire was swamped by hordes of Huns, Goths, Visigoth, Ostrogoths and kindred races of bigand little barbarians. The little ones were Huns. They overflowed southern and eastern Europe. By force of over-whelming numbers they conquered great areas, but more as a nomadic horde than as a settled race. It is these little people that are pouring to America now. Before them and behind them come thousands of Italians, little dark-viewged men and women with sharp features and furtive eyes.
